Two strangers. Same face. Same birth day and time. Zero connection... or so they think.

On their 18th birthday, a wrestler and a beatmaker wake up psychically, emotionally, maybe cosmically connected. And whatever it is doing it, it's powerful enough to rewrite who they are... and potentially destroy who they were.

['MILES_WEST'] + ['MILLER_BRUCE']

[MILES WEST] + [MILLER BRUCE] = Two strangers. Same birthday. Same face. Zero connection.

Miles is a wrestling prodigy from Jersey. Miller's a beat-making introvert from Cali.

Born at the exact same moment, 3:33am exactly 3,000 miles apart, now they collide as freshmen at USC.

What starts as weird déjà vu spirals into a shared psychic link: they feel each other's pain, hear each other's thoughts, and live moments they've never experienced. They're not brothers. They're not clones. But they are connected in ways that shouldn't be possible.

Enter a curious professor, Dr. Beam who may know more than he is willing to admit. He starts circling, pulling the boys into his web.

What they share is powerful. But is it a gift, a glitch... or a trap?

Now, with their lives bleeding into each other's, Miles and Miller must uncover who they really are before someone else uses their connection to tear them apart.
